A Beautiful Display

It was an icy cold night in November. Plop sat all alone on the top of a tall oak tree in the dark, shadowy forest.

In the distance he could see his mother float off into the darkness like a white feather. The darkness seemed to come towards him and wrap itself around him.

Suddenly Plop heard a faint bang and an unusual smell drifted towards him. His tiny wings started to tremble. He knew his mother would be back soon, but the time seemed to go so slowly. He had never been alone before. He closed his eyes and wished he had a friend.

At that moment, he heard a soft fluttering sound. What could it be? A pretty robin with a scarlet breast landed on the branch in front of him. The robin told Plop that a firework display was about to start in the nearby field.

The kind robin joined Plop on his branch and they happily watched the beautiful display together. A little while later, Mum returned home with a tasty treat and the three birds had a feast.
